

ELOQUIUM

DEBATE
SUMMER CAMP
2026

6–10 July, Marrakech

THE TYRANNY OF THE IMMEDIATE

Can a species wired for instant rewards ever choose sacrifice for a payoff it won't live to see?

We want it now. Always have. The whole world's basically built to feed that.

From the Eloquium Cup, to Summer '25, through September, November, and March : every camp got us hyped for this one.

Five days. One question we can't wait to argue about:

Would you actually sacrifice something today for a win you may not see?

This is the debate that gets messy in the best way. The kind where someone drops a point that makes the whole room go quiet, then loud. Where you walk in with an opinion and walk out having completely changed your mind : twice.

September was about finding your voice. November, defending it. March, sharpening it. This time we put it to the real test.

Five days of arguments that actually matter along conversations that go way past the debate floor, and a room full of people who think as hard as you do.

THE TYRANNY OF THE IMMEDIATE

Can a species wired for instant rewards ever choose sacrifice for a payoff it won't live to see?

At Eloquium, our motto is simple: SET THE STANDARD.

But standing still is easy. Waiting is hard. And greatness has never once been immediate.

So ... are you built for the reward, or the reckoning?
